A circular fibrous root is a man-made root and belongs to the artificial root; a fibrous root is a natural root and the parent root of the man-made root. At present, the artificial circular fibrous roots on the market mainly include two types, namely, one is a pile-like root formed by piling up stones, and the other is a concrete root that is mainly formed by injecting concrete into a tubular pipe or placing a tubular concrete to be formed into a root by an appropriate manner. The artificial circular fibrous root is simple in structure, low in cost, and is suitable for a large-scale construction. Moreover, when the pile-like root is not suitable for a large-scale construction, it can be replaced by the concrete root, which is developed in a large scale and is 2d92ce491b
