Airxonix's Mission Airxonix's mission is to design and manufacture an 'automotive fuel cell' that will replace the fuel cell batteries in the used light vehicles in the United States. It is a durable, cost-effective and safe alternative that would reduce greenhouse gases and harmful air pollutants, and could potentially produce electricity for a wide range of devices such as lights, computers, etc. We are a non-profit society, whose name pays tribute to our name sponsor. For example, we use the name "Airxonix" instead of "Air Fuel Cell" because we believe 'carbon' is a good thing. For information on how to join as a donor, please contact us. The goal of this site is to keep you up to date on current events, by using a simple, easy to understand format, and by providing a number of resources to help you find the information you need. Thursday, November 30, 2015 Under the directives of the EPA, states are making important strides in efforts to reduce or remove greenhouse gases from the environment. As more and more states, counties, and even communities address climate change through their actions, I've become a bit jaded by the resistance to the development of renewable energy. There is a cost associated with the use of fossil fuels, and unless we allow it to happen in this country, renewable energy technologies are here to stay. To stop them will require that we embrace the technology and make it our own. While I don't think that we should be starting from scratch, but we should be moving towards one that is cleaner. This is the future for the country, and the world. The ball is in our court. One of the things that makes me most unhappy is that we have folks in leadership who seem to believe that climate change is a farce. These people should be re-educated, and let them know that there are more of us in the country that are concerned about the dangers of climate change than they are with a possible terrorist attack. With that in mind, let's look at an important piece of information. The Environmental Protection
