No download or registration required - just click and play! Category:Engineering softwareQ: QML - Is there a performance cost to providing a user with absolutely no information? I'm building a qml app for mobile and desktop that presents a list of files on the screen. The application has an option to be used for, what I believe is common among Android users called "album picker". It is simply a button where the user can select a directory to browse. My question is this: Is there a performance cost to providing a user with absolutely no information about what he or she is doing? Let's say I provide a button with no text next to it and the user can click it to select a directory to browse. If there's no text to convey what the button is doing, is there a performance hit? I'm not asking if the button is clickable, just if there's an unnecessary text string to display for something that is literally a button. A: I'm not asking if the button is clickable, just if there's an unnecessary text string to display for something that is literally a button. You can try using a FlatButton without the text and a simple onClicked handler: import QtQuick 2.6 import QtQuick.Window 2.4 import QtQuick.Controls 1.3 Window { visible: true width: 640 height: 480 property string txt: "UI Test FlatButton 1" FlatButton { id: buttonFlat implicitWidth: 150 implicitHeight: 35 onClicked: { console.log("buttonFlat.clicked()") 1cb139a0ed
