I've been on a bike ride that ran from Venice to Santa Barbara since Wednesday and was in Venice again Friday, so I'm probably a little out of it. Just a little. But my library computers are still online (how I envy you all, who don't have to work in an environment as beautiful as this!), so I kept you updated via social media on the über-heroic ride. If you care about things like that. Which I'm sure you don't. So, ready for a nice, refreshing snack? I hope this recipe will make your lips water. Okay, we're diving into something new. This is a crisp, refreshing and coconut-rich dish. These are all things I associate with Cambodia. I would be a fool to miss out on the flavor of the tropical country where I spent several years living, working, and studying. For those who didn't know, I spent over nine months teaching English at a private school, and luckily, it was a nice school. My Cambodian friends still smile and laugh when we're together, and I can say with 100% certainty that I am a better person because of my time in Cambodia. Not many hotels and restaurants there, though. I hope to one day (this is my dream!) travel to the country to experience its incredible culture and beautiful land. That's why I decided to try something new and perhaps not my usual sandwich/dessert topping, but something that tastes just as great without the heavy meat and cheese. I had this coconut mixture leftover from when I made my take on the classic Taro Chips, and it's delicious. I changed the grain from taro to rice, and this rice version is surprisingly versatile. It's coconut-y, but it's not heavy like coconut. I just add the ingredients straight to my food processor – a trick I learned from my dear friend
