I'm starting to see posts that are just wrong. Is this a reasonable reaction on the part of community moderators to flag wrong answers? A: No. Wrong answers are, essentially, against the rules. They don't reflect our community standards and by hiding them, we turn a blind eye to them. Instead of gently suggesting a change in behaviour to the poster, we send the wrong answers to the 10k-visible review queue. If you see a wrong answer, immediately use the "Not an answer" and "No answers have been posted yet" link at the bottom of the page, rather than flagging them. If you want to alert a moderator of some of these wrong answers, go to the 10k-visible review queue and flag them for moderator attention. A: I think that it is acceptable to flag these, with a custom reason which includes a link to the answer. 09e8f5149f
