Post navigation DCF does not go deep into investigation of attempted homicide – for families of young man it seemed Dr. Yeager wasn't up to the task May 14, 2014 11:30PM MADISON – After an attempt was made on the life of an African-American teen from Greenfield and her mother, Wednesday, May 14, an all-white jury in Dane County Circuit Court, in which they ultimately found her not guilty of attempted second-degree murder, heard a small retinue of reporters follow Dr. Sadiye Yeager, the victim's toxicologist, and family members to the train station in Kenosha to complete a few details. What no one followed was the DCF investigation into the attempted homicide of 19-year-old Keeshia Nelson, whose 17-year-old sister claimed when she was shot in the back of the head and arm in Madison that she opened the door to allow the assailants in but, as she thought, they forced themselves in. The 18-year-old brother of Nelson's sister who was present that night, when Nelson was shot, and who previously cut his hand in an attempt to escape, will not be prosecuted for his role in the attempted murder. Keeshia Nelson and her mother Le'Niya also know what the case is all about. In 2002, the Nelsons, both black, were in Greenfield where Keeshia Nelson, the eldest of four children and star point guard on her high school basketball team, was in fifth grade and the mother, Le'Niya, worked at Lone Star Gas. One night Keeshia was outside with her friend Megan and "some boys," according to a search warrant, when they were approached by a teen. The boy then shot Megan in the face, killing her instantly. The boy then shot Keeshia multiple times, first in the leg, then in the foot, then in the leg again, then in the hip and finally in the head and arm. Le'Niya had spotted her daughter's assailants as they drove by, pulled over, and gave Megan CPR, but paramedics arrived to find she had been fatally shot, and Keeshia was critically injured. Yeager was the toxicologist for the state. What she determined in her trial was that the poison used was melamine, and Le'N

Analyst, consultant and author America Is Winning—the NRA Is Just Losing The New York Times just got a few things right in reporting that “in its annual accounting...[the NRA] used $3.7 million in salary and benefits of Mr. LaPierre's family members as well as millions of dollars to pay for the security arrangements at his residence, according to federal tax records.” Anyone with half a brain could have figured that out. The Times also has learned that the NRA withheld the tax forms and licenses from its officers' spouses and that executive vice-president and general counsel John C. Frazer “reportedly billed Mr. LaPierre's family members for personal use of a fleet of company cars.” Taxpayers should note that the NRA's action runs counter to the common sense idea that it's not normal to charge your followers for your own protection. As the NRA just explained, LaPierre and the organization “are under regular attack by the media and smear groups that hide behind the guise of being ‘nonpartisan’ or ‘neutral.’” The Times says another of LaPierre's side-kick's, Wayne LaPierre's son, Jason, was staying at the NRA's headquarters in Newtown on December 14, when the Sandy Hook tragedy occurred. In the context of the whole report, this may be the one item that the Times got right, although it's actually a mixed bag for the NRA. I'm not going to cover here the background of the article, but it's pretty complex. What did the NYT actually find out about the NRA? Here's what the NRA didn't want the public to know: – in April the NRA had entered into a five-year agreement with the government that forbade the NRA from disclosing how many members it has. It also barred the NRA from disclosing the national security classification of its materials as well as financial information related to the NRA. – NRA CEO Pete Brownell had sued the NRA to settle the security agreement when, after 5 years, he refused to renew the contract and refused to pay a $78,000 fee. The NRA's new president and CEO was in the process of negotiating a new five-year contract when the Sandy Hook tragedy occurred. The NRA had a settlement in
