In this study we expressed the enzyme in Escherichia coli as a fusion protein with maltose-binding protein (MBP) by using the chaperone GroEL from E. coli. The enzyme derived from the fusion protein was identical to the authentic form of endonuclease L in size, apparent mass, and susceptibility to proteolysis. The fusion protein showed autocatalytic activity in an SDS-containing protein-denaturing assay and retained autocatalytic activity at 37 degrees C in the E. coli periplasm. The native enzyme was easily purified from cells of recombinant origin. Analysis of the stability
