* For cutting and pasting various layers to create new images, find 2D Spacing Guide (an overlay) in the Layers palette, found in the bottom part of the Layers palette (on the left side of the screen). Open 2D Spacing Guide, and from the left side of the menu bar, choose Adjust New Layer to 2D Spacing Guide. When you're done with that, open the 2D Spacing Guide and choose the Close menu to close it. This is a handy time-saving feature that enables you to copy and paste layers in order to create a new image. This opens a simple image editor that allows you to add layers and have lots of options for creating and editing them. * To remove layers, choose Layer?Layer Via Copy?Go To Layer to open the Go To Layer dialog box. Choose Paste in the New Layer dialog box. Type a new layer name in the Name text box and select OK to create the new layer. * You can use the Eraser tool to remove unwanted layers from a photo or image. Launch it from the Select menu in the toolbar. Choose Eraser from the menu to choose that tool and then start selecting the objects you don't want to remove. It's important to do this very slowly and carefully because you can accidentally remove all the layers in your image, which can leave a black hole where your photo existed.

Large Street Widths Sensitive to the safety concerns surrounding the large road width, SES has completed extensive research to provide detailed guidelines for the development of wide roads. The report shows that the benefits of increasing road widths in an area are more than the risks, with a significant proportion of traffic being diverted from an existing wider road. This diversion of traffic means that traffic may be brought to a standstill and waiting motorists can be held up for long periods. In addition to the risks of accidents, SES has also determined that the increase in accidents involving pedestrians and bicycle riders is also likely to be significant. Scoliosis in Noonan syndrome: a report of two cases. Two children with Noonan syndrome developed scoliosis. Conventional radiographs suggested that both had developmental delay. Compared to previously reported cases, a widening of the face and the mental abnormalities were mild. Plain radiographs showed the deformity in both patients. In spite of the conservative management, a complete curve progressed from 50 degrees to 85 degrees in 1 year in one patient, and from 35 degrees to 70 degrees in 2 years in the other. This is in contrast to the usual progression, which is 30 degrees or less per year. Other forms of scoliosis seen in Noonan syndrome include a progressive form of scoliosis in which the major curve progresses to a major curve of 60 degrees or more; a thoracic scoliosis in which the major curve remains in the thoracic region; and a lumbar scoliosis in which the major curve remains in the lumbar region. It is therefore considered that progression may occur in any type of scoliosis, and it is of importance to recognize the progression of scoliosis in Noonan syndrome.

Q: grouping field values in pandas I have a list of strings that I am trying to group by their length. The strings will have a length of around 6-7 characters in length, and I am trying to group them into those lengths. I'm currently trying to do this using the nlargest function, but it's not working.
