Antivirus is not a new topic, we are all aware of what this application does and does not scan for. But what is new is that this application has its own mobile apps for android and iOS. Called "X-Ways Security", this app utilizes the device's location data and the local wifi networks that are nearby to provide "Security Worry Free" alerts. The app works based on "X-Ways Security" technology, that is a technology to detect any changes to your device and to notify you of your threat. So you will receive alerts for known threats that are detected locally or on the Internet. A Beginner's Guide to Static Sites The biggest obstacle to starting a profitable blog is letting go of the idea that the blog you have to create should be the one that you will write. The content should be generated, or at least curated, by someone else, because it will save you a lot of time. What is not to love about this kind of blog - you don't have to write anything, then! It makes so much sense that business owners and would-be entrepreneurs hire journalists to do their writing for them. But this does come with its own problems - journalists have little interest in blogging, and therefore they will rarely write for free. They also don't care about the quality of the content, whether that's the technical accuracy of their posts, the constant innovation of their ideas, or even trying to make the blog posts the most enjoyable to read. The way to solve this is to hire a content writer. But this can also be expensive, so you will need to have a blog host that has a content writing service. Or you can use a free blog service that will handle the content creation for you, while you edit and polish the product. Let's take a look at the most popular free services: Option 1 WordPress.com - This is the most popular choice for bloggers and the reason is simple - it is free and has a huge community of users. But the site itself is very limited in the content types that you can create and the number of pages that you are allowed to create

If you're a photographer, PC gamer or just someone who wants to be tech savvy then these tips will help you get the most out of your hardware. Your Smartphone is your most valuable asset for the past years. Most of the users rely heavily on their smartphones to browse the web, manage data, and of course for their entertainment needs. But there are a number of things that are done by you on your smartphone that are not actually executed by the manufacturer but by the operating system. So here are some tips that can help you get the most out of your smartphone by simply configuring it. Sleep Timer Use the sleep timer that comes built into your smartphone to ensure that your phone is not shut down while you are sleeping. This would prevent you from losing any important data while you are sleeping. Settings -> Quick Settings -> Disable the Wake Up and Wake On Sleep Timers. Soft Keys Most smartphones have dedicated soft keys on its phone keys such as Home and Back. These are used to quickly navigate around and get to places on your phone. If you prefer a more subtle and simple control then you can use the fingerprint login feature that you have on your phone, which is what most phones after version 12 had added. This would mean that instead of having to press the soft keys, you would touch your finger on your phone and a login would instantly happen. File Manager While installing applications from the Android Market and the Windows Phone Store on your smartphone, the package will suggest to you that you create a dedicated file manager. Although you should create a storage space in your phone for these applications, you can use the file manager to download the software instead. Android: Try this. Go to Settings -> Storage -> Apps -> Default Apps -> File Manager Windows Phone: Try this. Go to Settings -> More Settings -> Apps -> Default Apps -> Create Folder USB Port You might have found that your smartphone doesn't charge properly whenever you plug it in to
