Players can hone their shooting and dribbling skills as they drift the ball with the 'DX Trick' or 'Z-Lite', adjust their pitch shape with 'Z-Curve' and vary their speed and power with 'Kinetic Reality'. "Control" is re-configured to unlock more nuanced touch and balance for realistic football gameplay.

"Ejection" removes dead players to create more fluid gameplay, as well as using the data to determine which player is most likely to leave the pitch for a foul or injury. FIFA 22 will also introduce the 'Shot Profile' and 'Loadout Profile', which allows players to choose their own customisation options and special equipment.

Q: Issues with OOP with JavaScript I'm an app developer with little experience in the OOP as such, and so please bear with me... I'd like to make the following simple app with JS, very simply an image which can be controlled by the mouse and a song that plays: `function Window() { this.img = null; this.play_music = null; this.current_sound = null; } var win = new Window();` So this is the basic class, with 3 variables inside for the `img`, `play_music` and `current_sound`. In my code, I extend this class and I instantiate a new object, which is the test of my class: `function Main() { this.win = new Window(); } var main = new Main();` Then it just start defining functions and properties: `win.prototype.create_img = function () { return document.createElement("img"); } win.prototype.create_circle = function () { return document.createElement("div"); } win.prototype.set_img = function(x, y) { if (this.img) this.img.style.top = y + "px"; if (this.img) this.img.style.left = x + "px"; this.img = this.create_img(); } win.prototype.set_circle_pos = function (x, y`
